

George Francis Rejoins Jordan & Jordan's Market Data Practice

New York, NY – May 15, 2015 - George Francis, a specialist in market data compliance, contract interpretation and data analysis, has rejoined Jordan & Jordan's expanding Market Data Practice. George will manage client engagements that focus on market data compliance assessments and provide expertise to clients on the Market Data Reporting managed service offering.

George joins J&J from Bloomberg where he was a Market Data Compliance Analyst focused on implementing procedures in support of market data compliance across all Bloomberg Media products and services. Prior to that, he was a Market Data Compliance Analyst for Reval where he was the point person for sourcing, licensing and contract negotiations related to Market Data Services.

As George stated, "Market Data is widely used in more areas and manners today than ever before. The data providers have kept up by introducing additional policies and licensing fees around display, non-display, derived data usage, internal distribution and external redistribution of market data. Financial institutions are finding it difficult to achieve market data compliance due to the lack of staff or required expertise. Leveraging the subject matter expertise of Jordan & Jordan in the implementation of a market data compliance program will not only help the institutions keep up with their contractual obligations but also protect them from exposure to potential liabilities."

Tom Etheridge, Managing Director of Market Data for Jordan & Jordan, welcomes George back to the team. "George's combination of market data compliance and technology expertise will provide insight into the complex market data usage and compliance issues many clients face today. "
